

Lana Shipley

Lana practises corporate and commercial law with a particular emphasis on aboriginal and environmental law. She works with public and private companies in a wide range of industries, including mining, natural resources, energy, technology and manufacturing.

Within her corporate and commercial law practice, Lana conducts a variety of transactions, including asset and share acquisitions and dispositions, reorganizations and various other corporate proceedings. Lana also advises public companies on regulatory matters, continuous disclosure and corporate governance practices.

Lana's aboriginal and environmental law practice involves assisting clients with the negotiation of impact benefit agreements with First Nations in relation to proposed developments in the mining industry and other sectors, as well as permitting and regulatory matters that arise throughout the development of both small and large projects. Lana has also assisted in obtaining, maintaining, amending and transferring environmental authorizations issued by federal, provincial and territorial regulatory authorities.
